By Kalewa

Amongst the legends, or "mo`olelo" of Waialua we find mention of a procession of "lizards" passing through our neighborhood and one of them settling at Uko'a Pond (now, the long wet-land marsh between Loko'ea Pond and the Kawailoa Transfer Station). By all accounts her name was "Laniwahine". It has been written that she lived in the pond and manifested herself as some peculiar fish and could travel to sea through a tunnel in the bottom of the pond. Some have stated that this great shelizard possessed magic powers of various kinds and would appear in more recent times foretelling some great misfortune.

As with many legends, this one has its roots in the story of an actual person who came here from afar and chose to settle at a place that suited her. The Hawaiian legends are actually quite specific in many facts that have been translated into fantastic stories to entertain childish imaginations. Let us just take a look at the facts as the mo`olelo state them;

Laniwahine (Heavenly-Woman) arrived in a procession of others of her kind. Those included people with names such as "Mo`oinanea", "Keao-melemele" and "Puhiula". She was seen at the end of the procession with "Alamuki", her servant. She chose to settle on the plain of Lauhulu, just behind Uko`a Pond. She built a house that was considerably longer than any of the other habitations of her time. She became the matriarch of a line of descendants who seem to have died out by later historic times.

Uko`a Pond, like many isolated water-bodies, probably did have some types of fish that were found nowhere else and there is no reason to doubt that there was once a passage to the sea. Indeed, we do find fresh-water ulua in Loko`ea Pond today. But, if we dare to look at these mo`olelo, legends of Hawaii-nei, as oral history, rather than fairy tales, we must ask ourselves: "Where did these fantastic 'Mo`o' come from?"

The more elementary history books might tell us that the Hawaiian people arrived here some many years ago, traveled to and from elsewhere in Polynesia for a while then lived in isolation until Captain Cook arrived in 1778. Other books remind us that the Spaniards colonized Manila and traveled regularly between there and Acapulco, Mexico beginning in 1567. They also note that those massive galleons had Filipino crewmembers as well as representatives of all the Christianized nations, European, African, American and Oriental. Do not forget the Dutch and English pirates who preyed upon them as well as the untold numbers of Asian fishermen and traders who became dismasted in storms to drift about the Pacific. (In an upcoming chapter we will visit one who drifted right into Waialua Bay). Some writers have argued for other peoples crossing the Pacific with the capability of visiting these shores (Vikings, 15th Century Chinese, Lost Tribes of Israel, etc.). The simple fact is that the oceans do not separate people. They connect us.

Now, when you read of peculiar people in Hawaiian legends, especially in the next few chapters in this Saga, ask yourself just where they really might have come from.

Ciguatera Fish Poisoning: Part II

What are the most frequently reported fish with ciguatera? Different sources name different fish. The State Health Department lists roi, ulua, and palani as the most commonly reported. These three also appear on all the other lists. Other fish that appear on at least one list include grouper, red snapper, eel, amberjack, sea bass, Spanish mackerel, barracuda, jacks, wrasses, wild kahala, mepachi, papio, eel, kole, weke, manini and hapuupuu. My patient had ulua, which is a type of snapper. I know many of you have eaten these fish and have never become ill. The reason is that many areas on Oahu have no seaweed or algae affected by ciguatera. There are maps on the internet that color-code the most affected areas. On Oahu, areas next to Kaena Point and the Kaneohe Marine Base have higher rates of ciguatera.

Is there anything you can do? There used to be a test kit to check for the toxin, but production stopped in 2010 because of cost and low demand. Besides avoiding the suspected fish in high risk areas, never eat the head, viscera, gonads, liver or eggs of reef fish which contain higher concentrations of the toxin. Also, clean fish as soon as possible after caught or purchased. Remember, the toxin is not destroyed by cooking, freezing, drying, or salting.

If you develop severe symptoms, go to the emergency room where you can be observed and "supportive care" like intravenous saline can be provided. There is no antidote or specific treatment. Once you've been exposed to the toxin, repeated exposure will produce more severe symptoms. During the first six months after exposure, do not eat fish, nuts or drink alcohol or caffeine. These products can retrigger symptoms. Waialua, Baldwin and Island Pacific Academy continued from page 1 ploratory Academy and McKinley High School with a score of 48 to 41.

In an exciting three rounds, the Red Alliance took an early lead by winning round one. The Blue Alliance answered back, taking round two. In a classic matchup, it all came down to the final round. Waialua, the defending champions, led the Red Alliance to an early lead; however, McKinley High School picked up speed and began making basket after basket. As the seconds counted down, Baldwin and Island Pacific made their way to the bridge to balance and score the final blow to win the match, as the Blue Alliance maneuvered two bots from Punahou and West Hawaii to successfully balance on their own bridge and even the score. In an exciting last 15 seconds, Baldwin and Island Pacific teetered on the Bridge and their robots flipped over, effectively taking them out of the match. McKinley raced to make baskets, but could not hold on as the buzzer sounded, and the Red Alliance came out victorious.

"These teams were tough, but we came together and pulled through," Jandie Sabo, a member of Waialua's Robotics team. "To come out on top again, with our Alliance, is a feeling like no other, especially since it is my senior year."

Attended by fans, families, educators and industry leaders, the FIRST in Hawaii Regional Robotics Competition sponsored by BAE Systems awarded several teams with honors that rewarded design excellence, competitive play, sportsmanship and high impact partnerships between schools, businesses and communities. Held at the Stan Sheriff Center on March 22-24, the 38 high school student teams competed to earn a spot at the FIRST Championship held April 25-28, 2012, in St. Louis, Mo. Representing Hawaii will be: Representing Hawaii at the 2012 FIRST Championships will be:

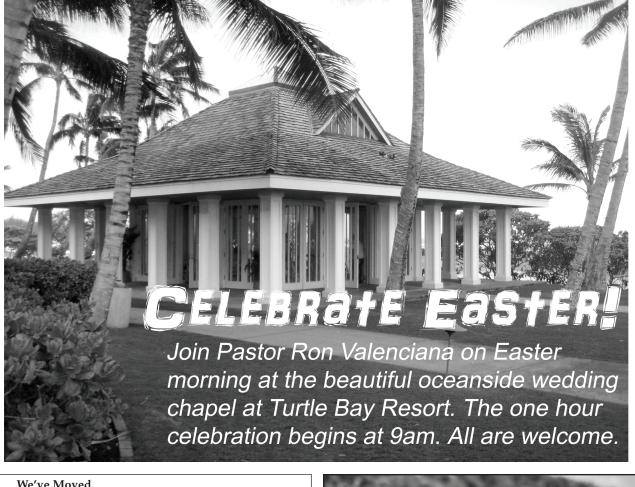

- •Baldwin High School
- •Island Pacific Academy
- •Kealakehe High School
- •Kohala High School
- •Waialua High School

Several awards were given out after the competition.

On Friday, March 16th, the Post Office at Waialae Kahala was dedicated as the Cecil L Heftel Post Office Building. District Manager Frank Santos (pictured here with Congressional Staffer Adriana Besama Alghussein) welcomed an invited group of former congressional staff members, media associates and family members of the Congressman as the plaque was unveiled. The program highlighted the story of Heftel who was born in Illinois and attended Chicago public schools. After serving in the Army, he eventually making his mark in broadcasting industry as the owner of several radio stations across the United States. Local residents would remember him best as president of Heftel Broadcasting in Honolulu when he developed and guided the KGMB radio and television stations to their years of market dominance under his ownership. Heftel ran unsuccessfully in 1970 to represent Hawaii in the United States Senate and was elected in 1976 as a Democrat to the Ninety-Fifth Congress, serving until he resigned on July 11, 1986 to run as a candidate for governor. At the age of 80, Heftel was elected to the Hawaii Board of Education and served a fouryear term. Cec Heftel died on February 4, 2010 in San Diego with his family at his side. Presiding at the ceremony and jointly responsible for the introduction and passage of the legislation that made the dedication possible was Congresswoman Colleen Hanabusa. Her remarks were a tribute to a man that leaves a rich legacy behind him, both as a political icon and as a business leader. Representative Hanabusa made a special point of introducing a member of her staff who helped draft the Heftel resolution that became Public Law 112-50 last November. Attending the ceremony along with her mother who is a teacher at Laie Elementary School was Congressional Staff Assistant Adriana Besama Alghussein. Now living and working in Washington D.C., Adriana graduated from Kahuku High School in 2003 where, in her junior year, she was the first Hawaii student ever chosen for the U.S. International Debate Team. She went on to graduate from Mount Holyoke College in Massachusetts with a major in International Relations and Economics. Commenting on the dedication ceremony, Adriana said "it was an honor to have the opportunity to research Congressman Heftel's life and professional career. His dedication to public service was inspiring and his passion for helping others was apparent. I particularly enjoyed meeting his former Congressional staff members at the Cecil L. Heftel Post Office dedication ceremony.

Through my many conversations with his friends, family and colleagues and my research, it was abundantly clear that Mr. Heftel made a lasting impact throughout his life and continues to do so to this day." The dedication of the Cecil L. Heftel Post Office was a tribute to the contributions of a political statesman. The integral role played by a Kahuku graduate is just one example of the positive impact of the dedicated teachers at Kahuku High School like Adriana's debate coach and English teacher Winnie Graham, who everyday provide their students with the building blocks of a solid academic foundation and love of learning that can lead to their success and fulfillment.

Aloha North Shore,

During election years, politicians are typically known to play it safe and avoid controversial issues. Legislation may be moving quietly past the public this year, but there is plenty of controversy in the Capitol over efforts to create a State Bank and to overturn important environmental protections.

The Legislature is rushing headlong towards repealing environmental laws in the name of fast tracking government projects. I support improving government efficiency, but I very much oppose blanket exemptions for large construction projects that could have significant, adverse environmental impacts.

Most directly under attack is the Special Management Area Permit which provides early disclosure of potential impacts to our coastlines. Several bills exempt airports, harbors, and other state lands from SMA permits, shore line setbacks and other permitting standards. Some allow the Governor to waive the environmental review process completely for certain government projects.

The greatest mistake in all of this is that the State Office of Environmental Quality Control is fully staffed, with no backlog, waiting to assist state agencies on guidance of actions that could be exempt. Exemptions are available, but somebody needs to look at the proposed action. Some agencies are unwilling to make decisions on exemptions; they now want permanent exemptions, all the time, no matter the action. This would be very bad policy!

This heavy shift away from environmental protection is a major policy question that is not getting as much public discourse as it should. Indeed, recent news articles have completely missed the topic, noting only that the Legislature is moving forward on streamlining state construction.

I believe the public remains committed to preserving and enhancing both our environment and our economy. It does not have to be one or the other. Senate and House versions of legislation will be completed in a few precious weeks and conference committees will rapidly revise legislation without public input before final votes and session closure on May 3rd. Now is the time to speak up, folks!

I am hopeful that enough concerned residents will take a moment to send an email to their Representative and Senator to tell them that the people of Hawaii still believe in environmental protection and that they do not support blanket exemptions. Contact information for all House and Senate members and legislative details are available at www.Capitol. Hawaii.Gov

Please feel free to share your opinions with me by sending an email to RepRiviere@Capitol.Hawaii. Gov, calling my office at 586-6380, sending a fax to 586-6381, visiting my website at www.GilRiviere. Info, or stopping by for coffee and a snack in Capitol Room 319. Mahalo.

KAHUKU.org donates $18,000 to Kahuku Int. & High School!

Community spirit and talented business savvy teens combined to give Kahuku Intermediate & High School another winning combination. Kahuku.org, the on-campus store and website that sells Red Raiders' merchandize was able to donate $18,000 to the school.

"The community came together to produce record sales," said Alicia Esche, the business manager of Kahuku.org. "Obviously our 'best seller' was the Kahuku football State championship T-shirt."

"Without the community buying Kahuku-logoed items from Kahuku.org, we would not be able to raise money for the school," said MaryAnne Long, the co-founder of Kahuku.org. Dollars spent at Kahuku.org are in turn given to the school to help the students of Kahuku High School, she explained.

The Kahuku.org store in located behind the Kahuku library on-campus and offers a wide variety of T-shirts, jackets, hats and Red raiders' logo items in infant sizes to 4X. The store has a staff of eight, but this year Esche got additional student volunteer help from teacher Debra Barenaba's Art & Communication class and the Kahuku Film Club each doing volunteer service projects.

The Kahuku art and Film Club students worked on graphic designs for posters, a Digital Media Campaign, product placement of Kahuku.org shirts in two videos, Branding at the State Capitol, Social Media Marketing, and sales at strategic locations outside the school. Three students were recognized for their exceptional enthusiasm and outstanding volunteer contributions: Andrea Pouesi, Peka Siilata and Nico Langley.

In addition, Kahuku.org has been successful because the school and community have supported its role as a provider of Career Pathways for students, explained Long. Kahuku.org is a division of the nonprofit Ko'olau Loa Educational Alliance Corporation (KEAC).

"The Kahuku.org business model not only benefits the school, but also gives student interns valuable experience in real-life business skills," said Don Sand, the Kahuku Film Club mentor and the director of Media Services for KEAC. "In order for our youth to be competitive in commercial art and digital media jobs, we should give our students many opportunity early on to find their gifts and develop their creative talents," he concluded.

With the strong support of the Community, alumni and visitors buying their Kahuku-logo products, and budding entrepreneurial students marketing them, 2012 should be another winning year for Kahuku.org.
