Council Chair Emeritus Ernie Martin

Serving You in District 2

One of the latest dilemmas in the efforts to resolve homelessness and its attendant issues is really not a new dilemma at all.

State lawmakers representing the Waianae coast, Rep. Cedric Gates and Sen. Maile Shimabukuro, recently accused the City of exporting the homeless to the Waianae area as part of a politically expedient move to transfer the homeless blight from urban Honolulu and the all-important visitor economy.

The lawmakers underscore their point by saying the latest homeless counts for Oahu show a 20 percent decrease in urban Honolulu while Waianae's homeless population saw an 18 percent increase.

The City Administration quickly retorted by saying the outreach efforts give the homeless a choice of where they would like to be sheltered. Once a choice is made, the City routinely provides one-way transportation to the shelter at no cost to the individual or family.

To be clear, forcing the homeless into shelters without their consent is a direct violation of their constitutional rights and the City would no doubt absorb costly lawsuits if it adopted that practice.

When the City first began implementing its sidewalk and stored property ordinances in Waikiki, adjacent communities worried that the homeless would simply pack up and move to areas where the ordinances were not in effect. That proved largely true. At those early stages, the availability of shelter space was not well-coordinated and the joint outreach efforts among the nonprofit sector was still in development.

Fast forward to 2018 and the methods and practices addressing homelessness have become more targeted, effective, and in compliance with existing laws. Additionally, the City and now the State have poured in considerably more resources toward homelessness.

Furthermore, the Legislature this past session approved the establishment of "Ohana Zones," which if not designed and operated properly, present the ugly prospect of tent cities popping up all over the island.

What this dispute does illuminate is that the City, in implementing the Housing First initiative, has to be sensitive to the concerns of the surrounding communities and to the optic of favoring urban Honolulu and Waikiki in the effort to reduce or eliminate homelessness.

There are many communities, even within the Council District I represent, that are grappling with an increasing homeless problem. While we don't want to see the populations increase, it is my belief that most well-reasoned people recognize the fact that this problem is in everyone's back yard.

(Good Health)

The Koʻolauloa Health Center welcomes Kehau Santiago as the newly hired community relations director. Kehau was born on the Windward side of Oʻahu but spent the last 30 years in Kahuku. She graduated from Kahuku High school and went on to pursue a Bachelor's degree at the University of Hawaii at Manoa. As a Native Hawaiian Health scholar recipient, she received her Master's degree in social work two years later. Kehau and her husband Walter Santiago have four grown children.

As a medical social worker, Kehau takes improving the health of others seriously, especially Native Hawaiians who have the highest rate of morbidity when compared to other ethnic groups. Having lost her own mother prematurely, preventing others from experiencing the same kind of heartache is what motivates her.

In 1994 Kehau's professional career started at the Kahuku Medical Center. She spent 2 years there and in 1996 was hired to create a child abuse prevention program in Hauula for Hawaiian newborns and their families. This project by the name of "Na Mamo Ola Pono", became a statewide model and eventually received funding by Kapiolani Medical Center.

Prior to joining the Koʻolauloa Health Center, Kehau spent 20 years with the Queen Liliʻuokalani Trust helping children with grief and loss issues after the death of a parent. Sadly, a number of those parents died from a chronic disease that was preventable. Native Hawaiian's are not only unhealthy, they are overrepresented when it comes to risk factors such as incarceration and poor economic indicators.

When Kehau was offered the Director of Community Relations Department position she jumped at the opportunity. It's more about building capacity and less about recruiting customers for her. She is looking forward to the journey ahead.

MALAEKAHANA

Long time North Shore resident; previous North Shore News Columnist, Malaekahana resident, and Hawaii business owner and resident David H. Fry has published a new memoir:

MALAEKAHANA via Amazon: https://www.amazon.com/Malaekahana-Paradise-David-H-Fry-ebook/dp/B07695XFZ7/ref=asap_bc?ie=UTF8

The 350 page memoir is the story of a young new arrival's search for paradise as he dreamed of it. He thinks he finds it but must battle a powerful estate for 5 years to keep it. The estate misjudged him and his tenacity. He and some of his neighbors made life difficult for them as they brought to bear a challenge to the leasehold system in Hawaii.

Through twists and turns he never knew how difficult tilting at windmills is the specialty of many such heroic efforts. Most are doomed to fail. Could he win and/or survive at the same time?

This effort is at the heart of the struggle to keep his paradise and do so against all odds.

As with other new arrivals there were plenty of wild and funny experiences as he got to know Hawaii and north shore life the hard way.

Hawaii residents and North Shore News readers are now able to purchase the Kindle version for a limited time at @ $2.95.

Although it is important to enjoy every relaxing moment of summer break, students must say their bittersweet goodbyes and begin preparing for another successful school year! Similarly to the rest of the academic year, it is imperative to think ahead and be prepared. This can be done through staging a morning "dry run" at least a week before school starts to see how long it takes everyone to be ready and out the door, leaving little to no room for surprises on the day of! Children will benefit from learning what to expect through developing a routine early on. Here are a few more helpful tips to make the back to school transition for you and your children as easy as possible.

Establish a set "Family Time": Whether it's during dinner or before bed, be sure to dedicate at least five minutes to chat about the day's events, as well as touch bases about tomorrow's plans. This simple habit ensures that you are staying connected with your child, not just about school, but also with their personal life.

Connect with friends: A familiar face can make all the difference when heading back to school. You might try calling parents from last year's class to refresh relationships before school starts and schedule a playdate - or even carpooling!

Find a planner method that excites your child: Staying on top of things can sometimes get difficult, simply because of a mundane routine! Find a way to let your child customize their learning tools and environment when the current method starts becoming lackluster. A bullet journal is a fun way to stay creative, organized, and on track of your goals.

Find ways to chill out: Stress is an inevitable part of school. Luckily, healthy stress levels can actually push you to your peak performance! Be sure to manage you and your child's stress by finding some enjoyable and relieving activities, whether that's watching your favorite television shows or going for a swim at the beach.

Start your day with a hearty breakfast: This one may sound cliche, but a healthy breakfast creates a solid foundation for the day, and is linked to improved concentration, better test scores, increased energy, and higher intake of vitamins and minerals. The brains of young students use up about half of the body's energy - so eat up! Try an omelet, or oatmeal topped with some fruit; something that will fill you up and fuel you up at the same time.

Save the easiest for last: When work piles up, figure out the hardest thing, then tackle it first while you're focused. Once it's off your plate, you'll breeze through the rest. This works hand-in-hand with avoiding unnecessary stress!

As parents, all we want is the best for our children, however, it is crucial that we do not let our fears negatively affect the busy days of our bright students. First day jitters are completely normal, and as long as you've prepared for the big day, you can instead focus your energy on providing your child with the love and support to finish another school year strong!

As always, please feel free to contact me if you have questions or concerns about any happenings in our community. Call me at (808) 586-9490, email RepMatsumoto@Capitol.Hawaii.Gov, or visit RepMatsumoto.com.

ROBERT "BOBBY" BUNDA

Candidate for the Honolulu City Council, District 2

I am proud to have served in the State Legislature as a Democrat. My decisions were always guided by what I believed would bring the greatest benefit to my constituents and our State. As a candidate for the non-partisan City Council, I realize that we are a community of many voices and the City Council must represent them all, not just those with a liberal or conservative agenda. Our district has a multitude of issues to contend with and cooperation is key.

Traffic

The North Shore residents who face daily traffic jams in both directions at Laniakea are justifiably angry. The only way to provide immediate relief is to reinstall the parking barriers. First replace the barriers then proceed with planning on the realignment as a long-term solution. Realistically, this could take years and tens of millions of dollars. Already subject to serious erosion, a severe storm or hurricane could undermine the oceanfront section of Kamehameha Highway at Laniakea, making it impassable. As a Senator, I worked with the State Dept. of Transportation when the community faced the crisis of a rockfall at Waimea Bay. Working with State and City officials on the Laniakea realignment, I would also stress the need for a mauka escape route during the interim as part of a disaster preparedness plan.

Affordable Housing

While I support requirements to include affordable units in new housing projects, we should also curb luxury developments until the inventory of affordable condominiums and homes approaches a more balanced ratio. But that alone won't be enough. A growing number of cities are using community land trusts to deal with the problem. Here in Hawaii, land banking has long been used to protect important agricultural and conservation resources. Land banking to address our affordable housing needs is a new twist to an old idea. The city or state provides land for a project but retains ownership. If the home owner wants to sell, the trust has the first right to repurchase the unit, keeping it permanently affordable for moderate-income families. To ensure the survival of Hawaii's middle class, we need to curb real estate speculation that drives up the cost of owning a home and increases the property tax burden on homeowners.

Support for Agriculture and Small Farms

Most of the food we consume on Oahu is imported and if something were to block incoming shipments, local food production would not be nearly enough to sustain us. We rely on local farmland for our some of our food but we have a way to go to achieve food security. We need to continue moving Oahu in that direction by protecting agricultural lands, supporting our farmers and promoting more aquaculture and aquaponic ventures.

Protecting our Environment

As a State lawmaker, I created the Ocean and Marine Resources Council that produced Hawaii's first comprehensive Ocean Resources Management Plan. Today it remains the blueprint for a healthy ocean environment. Later, as Senate President, I formed a community task force that led to the expansion of the Pupukea Marine Life Conservation District. I am very proud to have been a part of this environmental milestone of community-based management.

No Place for Mudslinging

Afraid to step into the light and be recognized, someone is sidestepping the law and mailing flyers to residents of District 2, falsely attributing them to candidate Dave Burlew. Dave has filed a complaint with the Campaign Spending Commission to protect himself from being wrongly accused of violating reporting requirements. These cartoonish flyers contain misrepresentations and false statements that attack my integrity and motivation for seeking public office, greatly exaggerating simple facts about me, even my age! I am a healthy and active 71 years old and not a 79 year old retiree. Someone desperately trying to affect the outcome of this race owes an apology to Mr. Burlew. Political mudslinging has never been my style. But we're living in a time of fake news when bots, trolls and bad actors can easily disseminate their lies to influence our thinking. If you receive a letter that doesn't smell right, I hope you'll put it where it belongs—in the trash.

Then Senator Bunda and Haleiwa Arts Festival Trace Hinckley celebrate the first year of the festival with an issue of the NSN in 1998.

The Chiefs

Episode 5 (of six) of the Saga of the North Shore

By Captain Richard W. Rogers

In about 1773, the Ali`i of Oahu elected to choose a young chief of nobel birth to rule as "Moi" over their island. Kahahana, son of the Ewa chief Elani, of the Maweke line, had been raised in the court of the Maui warlord Kahekili.

Kahekili requested the sacred lands of Kualoa and all the whale ivory on Oahu as payment for raising Kahahana. The request was denied, primarily due to the interference of the high priest from Waialua, Kaopulupolu. Kahekili spread false rumors of Kaopulupulu's disloyalty, which bore fruit in the execution of the priest for high treason. With the high priest out of the way, Kahekili went to war against his nephew and conquered Oahu. Kahahana managed to hide in the mountains for two years before he was, in turn, executed and sacrificed, on Kahekili's order.

In late 1785, Elani attempted revenge for his son's death by fomenting a rebellion amongst the Oahu chiefs, who were to kill all of the Maui chiefs on a certain night. The plan was discovered and only in Waialua did any Maui chiefs get killed that night. Kahekili's revenge was awesome. Every single chief of Oahu and all of their families, along with thousands of their followers, were slaughtered. The Maweke line was exterminated and the bones of those chiefs were made into a huge house, which stood for many years in Moanalua. Elani's body was placed on the coral platform just off Haleiwa Beach Park, which is named "Kahakau Kanaka". Kahekili used Oahu as a source of supplies for his wars on the windward islands.

Kahekili died in 1793, leaving Oahu to his son Kalanikupuli. The Army of Kauai was returning from the wars to the east and made war upon Oahu. Many warriors from Waialua and Waianae joined the Kauaians. By this time firearms, small and heavy, were being used to deadly effect by all combatants. Every Hawaiian high chief had Europeans in their ranks to train their infantry and direct fire from their cannon. The Kauai forces were defeated on the Ewa Plains.

Within a few months Kamehameha's army swept across Maui, and Molokai to land at Waikiki. In the "Battle of Nu`uanu" the forces loyal to Kalanikupuli were pushed up the valley where many warriors and their followers perished, as they were backed up and over the Pali.

Kamehameha garrisoned his Army on Oahu in preparation for an attack on Kauai. When news that the Kauai invasion had failed reached the Big Island, there was a rebellion which demanded Kamehameha's attention. Upon leaving Oahu, Kamehameha had all the taro dug up and all of the pigs on Oahu slaughtered. His reasoning was that so long as the people were concerned about famine, they would not have the energy to revolt against his rule.

With no high chiefs or warriors to support, the bounty of Oahu returned. Eight years later, in 1804, Kamehameha returned with his army. This time, more attention paid to agriculture. Kamehameha needed trading material, so as to purchase yet more firearms as well as floating stock. Kamehameha had become a ship owner and was entrenched in the sandalwood trade, which dealt in that and Pacific Northwest sea-otter pelts being sold to the Chinese, in trade for black tea.

When Kamehameha died in 1819, his closest family members maintained tight control of the islands. Keeaumoku Cox was given control of the Waialua District, which he used exclusively to extract products of the land and sandalwood from the mountains. By 1830 Cox had passed away, the sea-otters were nearly extinct and the sandalwood was gone.

Waialua was given to one of Kamehameha's daughters. Pi`ia. She and her husband La`anui settled on the North Shore and were instrumental in advancing the cause of Christianity.

With the Great Mahele of the 1840s, a more western-style of land ownership evolved. A grand-daughter of Kahehameha named Kamamalu was granted much of the Waialua District. When she passed away in 1866, her lands were inherited by the last of the Kamehameha line, Pauahi Bishop. All of her lands have been retained in trust, to be used for the "Education of the Children of Hawaii".

Next month, we will discuss the early Haoles and how they interacted with the residents of the North Shore.

Who Watches a Scrimmage?

by Boyd Ready

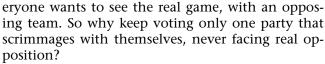

Republicans believe, with Thomas Jefferson, that governments are to protect our life, our liberty and our pursuit of happiness. And citizen legislators from other occupations, from among the people, not just career politicians, should serve in office.

Our country life style attracts independentminded people. Many of us are self-employed, small contractors, ranchers, farmers, fishermen, or independent and retired. Our surf industry is innovative, world-renowned, and attracts the energetic and freedom-loving. Tourists find hundreds of small businesses here. We don't like to be told what to do. Competition and liberty are good. But Hawaii state government favors and protects monopolies. Electricity, shipping, airlines, medical insurance, vast tracts of land, public unions, are limited to one or a very few providers. What happens? Prices go up, service gets slow and indifferent. Outside interests cram unwanted projects on us. Interisland ferry goes away, only one airline survives. Low-cost housing becomes impossible, sewage spills keep happening, business startups are discouraged. Chronic problems go on for decades.

all the shots. Developers, dominant businesses, and unions pay to ensure access. Decisions occur behind the scenes. Dissenters get locked out of future decisions. Another monopoly.

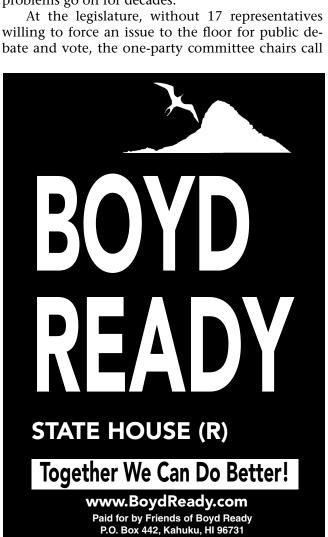

If legislators, willingly or not, nearly always vote the same way, while Hawaii's problems get worse, we clearly need alternative voices.

No one goes to a football scrimmage, ev-

It's not 'mail-in ballots' that will increase turnout: competition will.

I urge you to vote in the Republican primary for a good candidate. Then the main event won't be just another scrimmage. Choose the Republican section on the Primary Election ballot on August 11th!

Longtime lifeguard and legend bodysurfing Mark Cunningham just needs a bit of saltwater to keep his treasure hunting going. He is an avid champion body surfer and retired City and County Lifeguard who finds solace and exercise in combing the beach and reefs for something that tells a story. Finding an ocean "treasure" makes you wonder. Was a found fin in the last ride of ones surf go out? A found wristwatch with barnacles corroded and clinging on, did the waterman crash or did the wave just rip it off? When you walk by his art display you have to stop because in every piece you can see the adventure it tells. He sometimes groups things, joined in a unique way and your mind just wanders trying to envision what surfboard a fin came off of and what wave did it ride. Mark is a product of his environment, a lean, gliding machine who uses his shoulders to perfectly fit in the pit of a tubing wave. Lifeguards had to master the ocean and he did! He has won so many bodysurfing events it makes your head spin! Still winning and still finding thousands of objects that he turns into art for all to admire!

MONK SEALS FACE ANOTHER DANGER, 145 BIL-LION PARASITE EGGS A YEAR

Last month three endangered monk seals were found dead and health officials blamed a parasite that is found in cat feces. It was reported in a press release that cats are the only known reproductive host of the toxoplasmosis parasite, it reproduces in the feline digestive system. A cat can release 145 billion eggs per year in feces. Sounds incredibly horrible! The eggs can infect other animals, including humans both on land and in the ocean. The toxoplasmosis parasite attack muscles and organ tissue and can cause inflammation of the heart, liver and brain. The health department is warning us that feeding cats near streams and the ocean increases the risk. There is also a risk for Hawaii's native birds. The health department also states that deaths from the parasite are underreported in both human and animal cases. People can catch it from handling droppings but most catch it when eating poorly cooked meat reports the Center for Disease Control and Prevention. More than 30 million people in the U.S. carry the parasite but very few have symptoms because the immune system deals with it and the body creates antibodies. Reportedly the best thing to do is keep your cat inside and don't give it raw meat and you might think the same for yourself! Get your pet checked for parasites at least every year with an exam and keep your immune system healthy!! For more info ask your doctor and vet!

Talking Story with Tom Jacobs

North Shore Nostalgia ... Good Old Days Remember When ...

... There were no traffic lights from Wahiawa to Kahuku? No traffic either. Can remember driving down the hill from Wahiawa to Haleiwa Town middle of the night without meeting another car either way. No mo'.

... Sugar cane growing right through Haleiwa? And those cane-haul trucks on the cane-haul road. They had right-of-way every time.

... Country Donuts? Best pastries on the North Shore ... no, best on Oahu. Now, best is Ted's Bakery. Go try 'em.

... The 'Dawn Patrol' buddies calling from town ... 'How's the surf?' 'Overhead and clean.' Meet for breakfast at Haleiwa Café, surf until scrambling to work or until sunset, whichever came first.

... Four guys or wahine could rent a place on the beach affordably? OK, maybe eight guys. And if you had the money, beachfront prices were a quartermillion. But be careful ... maybe for a leasehold lot. Big bite comes later.

... Parking at Ehukai any time and finding a spot in the lineup. Richard Sterman remembers parking on Kam on the Kahuku side of Waimea and scrambling down the hill to surf. No cops then ... or if there were, hey, they surfed too.

... The Sugar Bar in the old Bank of Hawaii building in Waialua. North Shore funk, filling up at shift change at the sugar mill.

... No line at Matsumoto's Shave Ice ... because Aoki's was open next door. Now Kathy and Mike have opened Aoki's again across the street. How's come no one knows that? Come on, cross Kam Highway, shorten the line!

... The old Haleiwa Hotel, still standing in the early '50s, on the site of the first Protestant church on the North Shore, a big thatched hut. The Seaview Inn inherited the site (ono Chicken Hekka and fishermen playing ukulele and singing) which became Charthouse which became Aloha Joe's which became Haleiwa Ioe's.

... Miura Store in Haleiwa Town ... any kine' tailoring and board shorts for ten bucks.

... Jumping off Rainbow Bridge and Jump Rock at Waimea Bay as rites of passage. Still the same today.

So ... you got some old-time memories? Geeveum (tomjacobs@prodigy.net). Who knows ... if I get enough, maybe another talk-story.

A Library in Your Backyard

By: Allyson Earl, KUPU intern

Waimea Valley is home to over 5,000 different species of plants. Each species is part of a living library maintained by the incredible staff of Waimea Valley Gardens. We care for a variety of plants from around the world that are extinct, endangered, or threatened out in the wild. Here they find a home that allows their species to exist in perpetuity. Although all of these plants are considered exceptional, a special few are closer to our hearts; these are our native Hawaiian species

Most Hawaiian species arrived by luck to this, the most remote island chain in the world. From these single ancestors, unique species evolved that can be found nowhere else in the world. These endemic, or native species, colonized the islands in such vast numbers that Hawaii is home to highest rate of endemism in the world. Because many of these plants are so unique and rare, they are also exceptionally vulnerable to extinction. Hawaiian plant species are currently in danger for a number of reasons. The most prominent of which are habitat loss and destruction for cattle, farming etc, competition by non-native, or introduced species, and loss of birds or other species that would disperse these plants, through their seed, around the forest. These factors have caused the numbers of native plants to drop significantly and therefore, here at Waimea, we have added them into our living library in order to preserve a piece of cultural and historical information about the natural environment of Hawaii.

While the Ohia may be the most charismatic and notable of the native species in the race for conservation, there are many others that are in need of protection before they quietly disappear forever. One such plant is the Ma'o hau hele, Hawaiian hibiscus, or Hibiscus brackenridgei. This large yellow hibiscus was declared Hawaii's state flower in the 1980's and is found on every large Hawaiian island. Although found on every island, the species is in no way common. The last few pockets of species have recently been affected by natural disaster and are dwindling at an unprecedented rate. At Waimea this bright yellow flower is visible and vigorous in several native gardens, a sign of conservation in action for this now rare and beautiful species.

In addition to the showy Hibiscus, there is a small butterfly shaped fern that is becoming more and more scarce in the wild. The Marsilea villosa, or 'ihi'ihi, was federally listed as endangered in 1992 but populations on the island chains have been able to persist, barely, with less than 2,000 individuals remaining in only four sites throughout the islands. These ferns exist in ephemeral wetlands or pools. The seasonal flooding of these pools allowing this sensitive fern to procreate in time with the rising and falling of the waters. At Waimea, through propagation efforts by our staff, this fern has been given new life. With a robust population now in our nursery and in the park, this fern is available for purchase at Saturday plant sales. This addition to your garden or windowsill, properly cared for, will not only be a beautiful native Hawaiian plant but also your contribution to conservation of the natural Hawaiian environment.

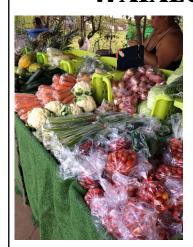

These are only two of many native plants that are either endangered or threatened here on Oahu and throughout the Hawaiian island chain. Through preserving these species, we hope to create populations that will exist for future generations to enjoy. Places such as Waimea Valley act as a conservation hub safeguarding these species against future threats, not only against Hawaiian native species but for all of the exotic and beautiful species that now call Waimea Valley their home.
